

Q: Who's a historical woman that you admire?

A: I thought about this quite hard, and on the basis that you've asked who I admire (rather than being inspired by), I would say Emmaline Pankhurst. She believed so strongly in the cause for women to have the vote and she took real steps forward in a world where women were often dismissed as irrelevant; I can't fail to admire her conviction and strength. I know that history is critical of her tactics, and some niggles over her effectiveness because of this, but she stood up for something on behalf of the many while others were able to stay safely at home. I admire anyone who does that, whether it be women's rights, climate change or Black Lives Matter.

Q: What do you love about your job?

A: Well it seems like a rather meagre job after talking about Emmaline Pankhurst, but what I love is supporting clients to solve problems in their lives. Which basically means I like to make a difference, even if on a smaller scale than some of the other amazing women out there. As an outsourced multi-family office, we take responsibility for many parts of clients' lives that they can't or don't want to look after. But it's more than admin and reporting, it's having strategic conversations about what clients want to achieve (next year, in 10 years) and helping them get there. I love the fact that nothing is off the table in my job. And I work for an organisation that encourages people to do what they love and do it really well.

Q: What career achievement are you most proud of?

A: Well it's probably a few things along the way. I worked really hard at the beginning of my career to pass my accounting and tax exams. Being dyslexic I'm pretty proud of the fact that I went for what I wanted to do and just did what I needed to get there. I was still a little worried that dyslexia would hold me back in a world where everyone seemed so intelligent and could navigate the tax law as if it were a menu in a restaurant. But I grew to realise that I actually had a valuable role being a broker between a technical world and the clients who needed to understand and apply tax laws to their lives. My ability to think a bit differently helped when I set up the Luxury Asset Advisory practice at PwC; I'm pretty proud of doing that too.

Nic Arnold

Head of Private Office - UK
JTC

Nic joined JTC in 2021 as UK Head of JTC Private Office. She has responsibility for the strategic development and performance of the UK's holistic Private Office services, along with working closely with JTC's premium clients.

Nic has extensive experience in bringing broad and bespoke fiscal governance to high net worth individuals and families spanning the globe.

Take a moment to look at the world from someone else's perspective.

Q: What does success mean to you?

A: If you feel proud of what you've achieved, that has to be the definition of success.

Q: What's a small thing everyone can do to embrace equity?

A: Take a moment to look at the world from someone else's perspective. The world moves so fast that people get caught up in what they want to achieve and don't appreciate the bias with which we come at situations, which has been carved from our own experiences. If we could stop, judge less and be more accepting, I think we would open up more opportunities for equality in day to day life. Big words maybe, but I think this has to be right.

